Abstracts

Group meal services are centralized, timed, and location-based catering solutions provided by catering companies or professional service providers to specific organizations or groups. They are widely used in businesses, schools, hospitals, construction sites, and other similar settings. Their core advantages lie in large-scale operation, standardized menus, nutritional balance, and cost control, meeting the daily dietary needs of employees, students, patients, and other groups. Typical service parameters include 400–800 kcal per meal, 3–6 dishes per meal (staple food, main course, side dish, and soup), and 1–3 deliveries per day. Service formats include on-site catering, pre-packaged delivery, and direct supply from a central kitchen.The upstream of the group catering service industry chain mainly includes food suppliers (such as vegetables, meat, rice, noodles, and seasonings) and technical modules such as central kitchen equipment, cold chain transportation systems, and nutritional analysis software. It needs to meet operational parameters such as a food preservation period of ?48 hours, temperature control during delivery within ±2°C, and nutritional error of ?10%. The downstream serves organizations such as enterprises, schools, hospitals, construction sites, and government agencies, with service recipients including administrative and logistics personnel, purchasing managers, nutritionists, and end-users such as employees, students, and patients. Future development trends focus on digital ordering, customized nutrition, and low-carbon menus, linked to health management systems. Simultaneously, with the accelerated urbanization in Southeast Asia, India, and Africa, overseas group catering market demand continues to grow. The overall gross profit margin is approximately 15%–25%, with high-end customized nutrition services reaching over 30%.

The global Group Meal Services market size was estimated at USD 25000.0 million in 2025 and is projected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 6.00%
