Abstracts

A healthy cleaning service represents a specialized segment within the broader cleaning industry that focuses on using environmentally friendly, non-toxic, and sustainable cleaning products and methods to promote occupant health, indoor air quality, and ecological responsibility. This approach prioritizes the elimination of harsh chemicals, synthetic fragrances, and volatile organic compounds (VOCs) commonly found in conventional cleaning agents, opting instead for plant-based, biodegradable ingredients, and employing techniques such as microfiber technology, steam cleaning, and HEPA filtration to reduce allergens, pathogens, and chemical residues. These services often cater to health-conscious consumers, including households with children, pets, or individuals with allergies, asthma, or chemical sensitivities, as well as eco-aware commercial clients such as schools, healthcare facilities, and offices seeking green certifications. The definition extends beyond product selection to encompass practices like waste reduction, energy-efficient equipment, and transparent ingredient disclosure, aligning with growing consumer demand for wellness-oriented and sustainable solutions in both residential and commercial settings.
