Abstracts

In-stream native advertising refers to video or audio advertisements that are seamlessly integrated within streaming media content on digital platforms such as video-sharing sites, music streaming services, social media, and OTT (over-the-top) platforms. These ads appear before, during, or after the main streaming content but differ from traditional pre-roll or mid-roll ads by matching the style, tone, and context of the content being streamed. This native approach aims to deliver a less intrusive, more engaging advertising experience that maintains viewer or listener attention and complements the streaming content, often leading to higher brand recall and better user engagement.
