Abstracts

Laminated wood flooring, also known as engineered wood flooring, refers to a multi-layer synthetic flooring product fused together through a lamination process, typically consisting of a high-density fiberboard or plywood core, a high-resolution photographic applique layer that mimics the appearance of real wood, and a protective top layer of clear melamine or aluminum oxide for durability and resistance to scratches, moisture, and UV fading. Unlike solid hardwood, which is made from a single piece of timber, laminated wood flooring is designed for enhanced stability and ease of installation, often featuring click-lock systems that allow for floating floor applications without the need for nails or glue. It serves as a cost-effective and versatile alternative to traditional hardwood, offering a wide range of aesthetic options and performance characteristics suitable for residential and light commercial use.

The global Laminated Wood Flooring market size was estimated at USD 8246.25 million in 2024 and is projected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 4.85% during the forecast period.
