Abstracts

Live events refer to any event or performance that occurs in real-time, where the audience experiences the activity as it happens. These events are typically hosted in physical venues, but with the advancement of technology, they are also streamed online for broader audiences. Live events can include music concerts, sports games, theater performances, festivals, conferences, and other activities that involve audience participation or observation.Live events are a significant aspect of entertainment, culture, and business. They provide audiences with an immersive and interactive experience, whether attending in person or via live-streaming platforms. Music festivals and concerts are among the most popular types of live events, where fans gather to enjoy their favorite artists and bands. Similarly, sports events bring communities together to celebrate athletic talent, while theater performances provide a platform for artistic expression. In recent years, virtual and hybrid events have gained popularity, combining the benefits of in-person participation with the convenience of online access. These live events, regardless of their format, create memorable experiences, foster community engagement, and are crucial in many industries, from entertainment to business networking.

The global Live Events market size was estimated at USD 1119740.0 million in 2025 and is projected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of -2.00% during the forecast period.
