Report Overview

Lupus nephritis (LN) is a severe kidney complication of systemic lupus erythematosus (SLE), an autoimmune disease where the immune system attacks healthy tissues, leading to inflammation and damage in the kidneys. It manifests in various histopathological classes (I?VI) based on the severity of glomerular injury, with symptoms including proteinuria, hematuria, hypertension, and progressive renal dysfunction. The condition disproportionately affects women, particularly those of African, Hispanic, or Asian descent, and requires early diagnosis and aggressive treatment to prevent end-stage renal disease. Current therapies include corticosteroids, immunosuppressants (e.g., mycophenolate mofetil, cyclophosphamide), and biologics (e.g., belimumab, voclosporin), though challenges remain in managing refractory cases and minimizing drug toxicity. The market is driven by increasing SLE prevalence, advancements in targeted therapies, and rising awareness, but high treatment costs and limited diagnostic precision pose barriers. Emerging innovations like B-cell inhibitors, complement-targeted drugs, and biomarker-driven personalized medicine are shaping future growth.

The global Lupus Nephritis market size was estimated at USD 350.06 million in 2024 and is projected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 6.89% during the forecast period.
