Report Overview

Maple wood is a popular choice for sport floors because of its hardness, which allows better traction compared to softer woods like spruce or pine. Maple is more durable than other species commonly used in gym floors due to its natural hardness and density. When installed correctly, maple floors are not only less expensive but actually perform much longer than traditional hardwood courts found in most arenas due to higher moisture resistance and lower expansion rates when subjected to changing temperatures and humidity levels over time. Maple floors require a sealing coat every few years, whereas traditional gym floors must be completely refinished after several seasons of play.
