Abstracts

Non-inflatable life jackets, also known as foam life jackets, are personal flotation devices (PFDs) constructed with inherently buoyant materials such as closed-cell foam, eliminating the reliance on inflation mechanisms or compressed gas cylinders to provide buoyancy. These devices are designed to offer immediate and constant flotation without requiring activation, making them particularly suitable for non-swimmers, children, and high-risk environments where reliability is critical, such as rough waters or situations where users may be unconscious. They are categorized under various PFD types (e.g., Type I, II, III, or V with inherent buoyancy) based on their buoyancy level, design, and intended use, and are subject to stringent safety standards and certifications from organizations like the US Coast Guard (USCG) and the International Maritime Organization (IMO). Their key advantages include durability, low maintenance, and consistent performance without the risk of malfunction due to failure to inflate, though they are often bulkier and less comfortable than their inflatable counterparts.

The global Non Inflatable Life Jacket market size was estimated at USD 350.25 million in 2024 and is projected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 4.30% during the forecast period.
