Abstracts

North American whiskies encompass a diverse category of distilled spirits primarily produced in the United States and Canada, characterized by distinct production methods, aging requirements, and grain compositions that differentiate them from other global whisky styles. Key types include American bourbon, which must be made from at least 51% corn and aged in new charred oak barrels; Tennessee whiskey, similar to bourbon but filtered through sugar maple charcoal; rye whiskey, featuring a predominant rye grain content for a spicier profile; and Canadian whisky, typically lighter and smoother, often blended and aged for a minimum of three years in oak barrels. The category is regulated by specific legal standards in each country, such as the U.S. Standards of Identity for Distilled Spirits, which govern labeling, production techniques, and maturation processes to ensure authenticity and quality.
