Abstracts

An online consultation service platform refers to a digital platform that provides users with integrated medical services via the internet, including consultation, symptom assessment, prescription issuance, follow-up visits, online medication purchase, health management, and electronic medical record management. It typically integrates doctor resources, intelligent triage systems, remote audio and video technology, and medical data interfaces to provide patients with a convenient, efficient, and continuous online medical experience, while also providing medical institutions with operational support and service extension capabilities. The downstream of online consultation service platforms mainly targets entities with a strong demand for expanding online medical capabilities, such as medical institutions, pharmaceutical companies, insurance companies, and government public health systems. Specifically, hospitals and clinics use the platform to expand their internet-based medical capabilities, enabling follow-up visits, chronic disease management, and prescription outflow; pharmaceutical companies and chain pharmacies rely on the platform to conduct online medication purchases, medication guidance, and pharmaceutical services; insurance companies utilize the platform's online consultation, health assessment, and follow-up management capabilities to conduct health insurance cost control and value-added services; and government departments use the platform to support grassroots contracted services, family doctor management, and public health monitoring. Due to the "asset-light, platform-strong" nature of online consultation services, their overall gross profit margin typically remains around 56%. The rise of the comprehensive online consultation service platform marks the entry of medical services into a new era of digitalization and intelligence. It has effectively alleviated problems such as uneven distribution of medical resources and difficulty in seeking medical treatment. By breaking the constraints of time and space, online consultation provides patients with a more convenient medical approach, especially in chronic disease management and daily health consultation. It has significant advantages. However, the rapid development of the platform has also brought new challenges such as medical privacy protection and diagnosis and treatment quality assurance. In the future, online consultation needs to be continuously optimized in terms of technological innovation, supervision improvement and medical service standardization in order to better provide safe and efficient health services to the public.

The global Online Consultation Comprehensive Service Platform market size was estimated at USD 5101.0 million in 2025 and is projected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 20.10% during the forecast period.
