Abstracts

Online personal styling services are business models that provide users with personalized outfit suggestions, clothing recommendations, and image design services through internet platforms or mobile applications. At its core, these services leverage artificial intelligence algorithms, a team of professional stylists, or a combination of both, to provide customized fashion solutions based on factors such as the user's body type, skin tone, style preferences, occasion needs, and budget. The supply chain of online personal styling services combines digital styling systems with fashion product logistics. It involves customer data analysis, AI-based outfit recommendations, clothing suppliers, warehousing, logistics, and customer service. There are three main models: service-based platforms offering styling only, product-integrated models combining styling and clothing delivery, and private-label models with in-house brands. Effective management relies on data-driven demand forecasting, flexible inventory, supplier collaboration, and efficient return handling. Current trends emphasize AI optimization, sustainability, and global supply integration. The gross profit margin in 2024 will be approximately between 30% and 60%.
