Abstracts

Parmigiano Reggiano is a hard, granular cheese originating from specific provinces in Italy's Emilia-Romagna and Lombardy regions, produced exclusively from raw cow's milk, rennet, and salt, with no additives permitted. It is aged for a minimum of 12 months, though often much longer, developing complex nutty, savory, and crystalline textures that distinguish it from generic "parmesan" imitations. Protected under the European Union's PDO (Protected Designation of Origin) status, its production adheres to strict traditional methods, geographic boundaries, and quality standards, ensuring its authenticity, heritage, and premium positioning in the global market.
