Abstracts

Part time job platforms are digital marketplaces that connect individuals seeking flexible, non-permanent employment with employers offering short-term, project-based, or hourly positions. These platforms typically facilitate the entire hiring lifecycle, including job postings, candidate search and filtering, application management, communication tools, and sometimes payment processing, with many operating on a commission-based or subscription revenue model. They serve diverse user segments such as students, freelancers, caregivers, retirees, and businesses ranging from small local enterprises to large corporations looking to scale their workforce dynamically. By leveraging algorithms for matching skills to opportunities and offering features like remote work options and user reviews, these platforms reduce friction in the part-time labor market while addressing evolving workforce trends like gig economy growth and demand for work-life balance.
