Abstracts

The 2025 U.S. tariff policies introduce profound uncertainty into the global economic landscape. This report critically examines the implications of recent tariff adjustments and international strategic countermeasures on Pastured Chicken competitive dynamics, regional economic interdependencies, and supply chain reconfigurations. Pastured chicken refers to poultry raised in a farming system that prioritizes access to open, grassy pasture (or similar natural outdoor environments) where the birds can engage in their innate behaviors such as pecking, scratching, foraging, and roaming freely. Unlike chickens raised in intensive confinement (e.g., battery cages) or even some "free-range" systems with limited outdoor space, pastured chickens typically have continuous, extensive access to fresh pasture, sunlight, and fresh air, allowing them to forage naturally for insects, worms, seeds, grasses, and other vegetation as a significant part of their diet. Their diet is often supplemented with organic or non-genetically modified (non-GMO) feed to ensure nutritional balance, but the emphasis remains on their ability to consume natural forage. This method is celebrated for promoting animal welfare, supporting natural behavior, and often results in meat (and eggs, for pastured hens) with distinct qualities, though the core definition centers on the birds' lifestyle: reared in harmony with their natural instincts, amid open pasture.

The global Pastured Chicken market size was estimated at USD 3842.0 million in 2025 and is projected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 6.30% during the forecast period.
