Peer to Peer (P2P) insurance is a decentralized insurance model in which individuals form small groups or pools to collectively insure against specific risks, often facilitated through a digital platform that automates underwriting, claims processing, and fund management. This structure combines elements of traditional mutual insurance with modern technology, enabling members to share premiums and claims within their group; any unused premiums at the end of a coverage period may be returned to members or reinvested, promoting transparency, trust, and reduced moral hazard through community oversight and shared financial interest.
