Abstracts

Personalized cancer medicine, also known as targeted therapies or precision medicines, are medications designed to specifically target the unique genetic or molecular characteristics of an individual patient"s cancer. These drugs are a central component of personalized cancer medicine and are chosen based on the genomic and molecular profiling of the patient"s tumor.Immunotherapies: While not traditional targeted therapies, immunotherapies like immune checkpoint inhibitors are another form of personalized cancer treatment. These drugs enhance the patient"s immune system to recognize and attack cancer cells, and they can be tailored to patients based on their tumor"s molecular characteristics.Personalized cancer treatment drugs have revolutionized cancer care by allowing oncologists to tailor treatment plans to the individual characteristics of each patient"s cancer. This approach holds great promise for improving outcomes and reducing the side effects associated with traditional cancer treatments. However, ongoing research and advancements are needed to expand the repertoire of targeted therapies and ensure that they are accessible to more cancer patients.In the global market, the core manufacturers of Precision Cancer Medicine (Personalised Cancer Medicine) are AbbVie, Johnson & Johnson, Novartis, and others. The top three players within this industry account for about 30% of the market share. North America, Europe, and Asia Pacific are the major manufacturing regions for this product, with North America accounting for over 50% of the global market share. The product can be classified on the basis of treatment into immunotherapy and targeted therapy drugs. The product is widely used in the treatment of lung, breast, prostate, blood and other cancers.

The global Personalized Cancer Medicine market size was estimated at USD 192390.0 million in 2025 and is projected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 12.50% during the forecast period.
