Abstracts

Pet aquamation service, also known as water cremation or alkaline hydrolysis, is an eco-friendly and gentle aftercare method for deceased companion animals. Instead of using flame-based cremation, aquamation relies on a natural process that combines water, alkaline solution (typically potassium or sodium hydroxide), heat, and gentle agitation to accelerate the natural decomposition of soft tissue. Over the course of several hours, the process breaks down the body into a sterile liquid and bone remains, which are then dried and returned to the pet owner as a soft, white ash. The liquid byproduct is non-toxic and often safely returned to the environment through standard wastewater treatment. Aquamation uses significantly less energy than traditional cremation and produces no air emissions or harmful greenhouse gases, making it a sustainable alternative for pet aftercare. Many veterinary clinics and pet memorial services now offer aquamation as a dignified and environmentally responsible choice for honoring beloved pets.

The global Pet Aquamation Service market size was estimated at USD 365.0 million in 2025 and is projected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 9.20% during the forecast period.
