Abstracts

Private counseling and support platforms are online communication platforms that provide users with emotional support, psychological guidance, and listening services. Users can communicate with professional counselors, listeners, or intelligent assistants via text, voice, or video in an anonymous or privacy-protected environment. The core of these platforms is to provide a safe, confidential, and non-judgmental communication space to help users release stress, obtain psychological comfort, or resolve emotional distress. They are commonly used in areas such as romantic relationships, workplace stress, and mental health, and utilize AI matching algorithms combined with human-machine collaboration to improve user experience and consultation efficiency. The downstream clients of private counseling and support platforms mainly include individual users, mental health institutions, corporate employee care projects, and education and dating service platforms. Individual users are the core demand group, primarily seeking services such as emotional support, psychological counseling, and anonymous venting. Businesses and schools provide psychological support and stress management services to employees or students through partnerships. Dating and social platforms also enhance user stickiness and trust by integrating these services. Because the industry is mainly based on digital content and human services, human resources and platform operations account for a high proportion of the cost structure. However, users have a strong willingness to pay and a high service repurchase rate, so the overall gross profit margin is usually maintained at around 63%.

The global Private Counseling and Support Platform market size was estimated at USD 1056.0 million in 2025 and is projected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 16.20% during the forecast period.
