Abstracts

Private motor insurance is a specialized financial product designed to protect vehicle owners against financial losses resulting from accidents, theft, damage, or third-party liabilities, with policies typically segmented into third-party liability coverage (mandatory in most jurisdictions to cover injuries or damages caused to others), third-party fire and theft (extending protection to the policyholder's vehicle in specific scenarios), and comprehensive coverage (offering the broadest protection including accidental damage, vandalism, and personal accident benefits). The market is characterized by risk-based pricing models that factor in variables such as driver age, vehicle type, location, claims history, and usage patterns, while also being heavily influenced by regulatory frameworks, technological advancements like telematics and AI-driven underwriting, and competitive dynamics among insurers striving to balance profitability with customer acquisition and retention.
