Abstracts

The 2025 U.S. tariff policies introduce profound uncertainty into the global economic landscape. This report critically examines the implications of recent tariff adjustments and international strategic countermeasures on Puffer Jacket competitive dynamics, regional economic interdependencies, and supply chain reconfigurations. Puffer Jacket is a top coat with down as the core filling material, wrapped with an outer fabric that is windproof, water-repellent or has certain tear-resistant properties (such as nylon, polyester, etc.). It is warm and lightweight. It is usually designed in a short or medium-short version, fitting the contour of the upper body. The cuffs, collar, hem and other parts are mostly elastic or adjustable to reduce heat loss. At the same time, the down distribution is fixed through quilting technology to prevent the filling from shifting. The overall design takes into account the flexibility required for outdoor activities and the fashion sense of urban commuting scenes. It is suitable for wearing in an environment with low temperatures but without the need for a heavy and long coat. Analysis of the development trend, driving factors and obstacles of the Puffer Jacket industry.

Development trend High-end and functional upgrade The increasing demand of consumers for warmth, lightness and design has driven the growth of the high-end Puffer Jacket market. For example, down jackets using new materials such as graphene and aerogel significantly improve warmth performance while achieving lightweight. Functional upgrades have become standard, such as windproof, waterproof and breathable "three-proof" functions, meeting the needs of outdoor and daily multi-scene scenarios.

II. Driving factors Technological innovation and material breakthroughs The application of new fabrics and filling materials (such as graphene and aerogel) improves product performance and meets the needs of extreme environments. Production process optimization (such as box-type filling process) reduces quilting lines, improves warmth and optimizes the version.

III. Obstacles Raw material price fluctuations and cost pressure The prices of raw materials such as down and fabrics continue to rise, and labor costs increase, compressing corporate profit margins. Low-price competition leads to quality reduction and increased risk of supply chain out of control. Consumers are more sensitive to prices, and the high-end brand route faces challenges.

The global Puffer Jacket market size was estimated at USD 277948.0 million in 2025 and is projected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 18.00% during the forecast period.
