Abstracts

Root beer is a non-alcoholic beverage, usually based on root plants (such as holly roots, vanilla roots, etc.), with the addition of sugar, spices and other flavor ingredients. It usually tastes sweet and spicy, and often has a rich foamy character. Root beer is particularly popular in the United States, often as a refreshing drink or as an ice cream float. The history of this drink can be traced back to the 19th century, when it was originally made by early brewers and pharmacists. The market trend of root beer has shown strong growth in recent years, mainly driven by the increasing demand for non-alcoholic beverages among consumers. More and more people are seeking alternatives to alcohol, especially in social occasions, and root beer is favored for its unique flavor and retro charm. In addition, the rise in health awareness has prompted brands to launch low-sugar, natural ingredients and organic versions to cater to health-conscious consumers. These changes have attracted a wider audience, including young people and families. At the same time, the diversified products of root beer continue to increase, and innovative flavor combinations and packaging designs make it more competitive in the market. In addition, the promotion of social media and the rise of beverage culture have also contributed to the popularity and sales of root beer. As consumer habits evolve, the market prospects of root beer are promising and are expected to continue to grow in the future. Overall, root beer is gradually becoming an important player in the non-alcoholic beverage market.

The global Root Beer market size was estimated at USD 644.0 million in 2025 and is projected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 3.50% during the forecast period.
