Abstracts

Robotic Process Automation (RPA) for finance and banking refers to the deployment of software robots, or "bots," to automate high-volume, repetitive, rule-based tasks that were traditionally performed by human employees in financial institutions. These tasks include data entry, transaction processing, account reconciliation, compliance reporting, fraud detection, customer onboarding, and regulatory submissions. By mimicking human interactions with digital systems, RPA enhances operational efficiency, reduces errors, ensures compliance with stringent regulations, and allows human workers to focus on higher-value analytical and strategic activities.
