Abstracts

Semi skimmed fish meal is a high-protein animal feed ingredient produced through a partial fat removal process during the cooking, pressing, and drying of whole fish or fish trimmings, typically containing between 60-68% protein and 4-9% fat, making it a mid-range product between high-fat whole fish meal and low-fat, fully-skimmed fish meal in terms of both nutritional profile and production cost. It is primarily utilized in aquaculture feeds—especially for species like shrimp, marine fish, and some freshwater varieties that require moderate lipid levels—as well as in poultry and swine diets, where it serves as a palatable and digestible source of essential amino acids, omega-3 fatty acids, minerals, and vitamins, balancing cost-efficiency with targeted nutritional outcomes.
