Abstracts

Solid hardwood flooring is a premium flooring product consisting of planks made entirely from a single piece of timber, milled from species such as oak, maple, walnut, or hickory, and is distinguished by its natural grain, durability, and capacity for refinishing multiple times over its lifespan. It is typically installed using tongue-and-groove systems, either nailed or glued to a subfloor, and is valued for its longevity, aesthetic appeal, and contribution to property value, though it is susceptible to moisture and requires specific environmental conditions to prevent warping or cupping.
