Abstracts

The 2025 U.S. tariff policies introduce profound uncertainty into the global economic landscape. This report critically examines the implications of recent tariff adjustments and international strategic countermeasures on Supermarket Barcode Locker competitive dynamics, regional economic interdependencies, and supply chain reconfigurations. The supermarket barcode locker is an intelligent storage device based on barcode recognition technology to realize self-service storage and retrieval of items. Its core system uses a single-chip microcomputer as the control center, integrates a thermal printing module, a barcode scanning module and an electromagnetic lock drive unit, and completes the storage and retrieval process through a human-computer interaction interface (including an LCD display and an operating keyboard): after the user presses the "save" button, the system automatically allocates an empty box and triggers the thermal printer to generate encrypted barcode paper, and the electromagnetic lock releases the corresponding box door at the same time; when taking items, scan the barcode or enter the barcode digital code, and after system decoding and verification, the electromagnetic lock is driven to open the box door. During this period, an infrared sensor is used to detect the status of items in the box in real time, and it has power-off protection, log recording and background management authority functions. It can be widely used in public places with large passenger flow such as supermarkets and libraries to improve the safety and management efficiency of item storage. Currently, the global supermarket barcode locker market is in a steady growth phase, with the North American market dominating (about 40% share). The market is mainly driven by retail automation, logistics efficiency improvement and intelligent technologies (such as contactless scanning), but it also faces challenges of high costs and technical security (such as barcodes can be easily cloned by mobile phone photos). In terms of the competitive landscape, international manufacturers such as Penco, Salsbury Industries, and American Locker occupy a leading position, and Chinese local companies such as Shanghai Tianqi Industrial are also accelerating their layout. Future trends include the popularization of smart lockers (integrated AI/IoT), the growth of multi-door customized designs (such as 6-door and 24-door cabinets, etc.), and the expansion of applications in new scenarios such as express logistics.

The global Supermarket Barcode Locker market size was estimated at USD 1241.0 million in 2025 and is projected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 6.90% during the forecast period.
