Vitamin E polyethylene glycol succinate is an esterified vitamin E (tocopherol) derivative primarily used as a solubilizer or emulsifying agent because of its surfactant properties. Structurally, it is amphipathic and hydrophilic, unlike the tocopherols, and therefore it is a water-soluble derivative that can be used in pharmaceutical formulations such as capsules, tablets, hot-melt extrusion, microemulsions, topical products, and parenterals. One of the most important applications is its use as a vehicle for lipid-based drug delivery formulations. It can also be used as a source of vitamin E.
