Abstracts

Transoral Robotic Surgery (TORS) refers to a minimally invasive surgical technique that utilizes a robotic system, typically the da Vinci Surgical System, to perform complex procedures through the natural orifice of the mouth, eliminating the need for external incisions. It is primarily employed for the resection of benign and malignant tumors located in the throat, base of the tongue, tonsils, and other areas of the oropharynx and larynx, offering enhanced precision, dexterity, and three-dimensional visualization compared to traditional open surgery or non-robotic minimally invasive approaches. The global market for TORS is expanding, driven by the rising incidence of oropharyngeal cancers?particularly those associated with human papillomavirus (HPV)?alongside growing surgeon adoption, technological advancements in robotic systems, and increasing patient preference for less invasive procedures that reduce hospital stays, recovery time, and postoperative complications. Key market players include Intuitive Surgical, which dominates with its da Vinci platforms, alongside emerging competitors developing specialized robotic systems for head and neck applications. Market growth is supported by favorable clinical outcomes, expanding surgical indications, and growing training programs, though high costs of robotic systems, procedural expenses, and the need for specialized surgeon training remain significant barriers to widespread adoption, particularly in developing regions. Geographically, North America leads in market share due to advanced healthcare infrastructure and high healthcare expenditure, followed by Europe, while the Asia-Pacific region is expected to witness the fastest growth owing to increasing healthcare investments, growing awareness, and rising prevalence of head and neck cancers.

The global Transoral Robotic Surgery market size was estimated at USD 1020.5 million in 2024 and is projected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 12.40% during the forecast period.
