Abstracts

Dubbing, in the world of television shows and movies, refers to the process where the original language of the program is replaced with a different language. This involves replacing the original voices with those of voice actors who perform in the preferred language of the audience. For example, an English dub would replace the original language (be it Japanese, Spanish, German, etc.) with English. Dubbing is a post-production process. Once a TV series or film is shot, it goes to a studio where voice actors, often professionals who specialize in this kind of work, record their lines in the studio while watching the footage. The goal is to match their dialogue to the on-screen lip movements of the original actors as closely as possible. The COVID-19 pandemic has accelerated the adoption of remote dubbing. Voice actors no longer need to travel to a dedicated studio; they can now achieve high-quality recordings using professional home sound cards, microphones, and cloud-based collaboration platforms. This significantly improves production efficiency, breaks down geographical constraints, and enables global talent pooling. Cloud-based sharing and management of audio and video files and scripts streamlines the collaborative process between directors, producers, and voice actors. AI tools can be used for initial script generation, voice-to-subtitle conversion, and pre-dubbing of rough cuts, assisting human voice actors and improving pre-production efficiency. AI speech synthesis technology is maturing. While it still cannot completely replace top voice actors in terms of emotional and artistic expression, it is now capable of handling less emotionally demanding tasks such as news reporting, data interpretation, and low-budget content. This has lowered production costs in some markets and forced human voice acting to move towards more creative and emotionally engaging high-end markets. Advanced audio software can better handle noise, repair recording flaws, and enhance sound quality, ensuring the technical quality of the final product.

The global TV Shows Dubbing Service market size was estimated at USD 14739.0 million in 2025 and is projected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 4.20% during the forecast period.
