Report Overview

Ultra-high temperature (UHT) milk packaging refers to specialized containers designed to preserve milk treated at ultra-high temperatures (135?150?C) for 2?5 seconds, extending shelf life without refrigeration for up to 9 months. These packages typically employ multi-layered materials such as polyethylene, paperboard, and aluminum foil to ensure aseptic conditions, light and oxygen barriers, and structural integrity. Common formats include tetrahedral cartons, brick-shaped packs, and pouches, often featuring sterile filling technology to prevent contamination. The packaging is critical for maintaining product safety, convenience, and sustainability, catering to global supply chains where refrigeration infrastructure may be limited. Innovations focus on eco-friendly materials, lightweighting, and resealable designs to align with consumer demand for portability and environmental responsibility.
