Report Overview

Some commonly sold medicines in veterinary hospitals are vaccines, parasiticides, flea or tick control medicines, worm care products, NSAIDs, analgesics, dental care products, and wound care products. Growing demand for animal products, such as meat, egg, and milk, is encouraging farmers to adopt necessary vaccinations for their animals to gain a healthy production rate and higher profitability. Moreover, growing awareness about zoonotic diseases and the interconnectedness between animal health & human health has resulted in greater attention to necessary veterinary medicines in hospitals. The surgical procedures performed in veterinary hospitals are categorized majorly into two sectors: urgent and elective procedures. Some of the common elective surgeries performed for companion animals are spaying & neutering, benign skin growths, and dental extractions. The commonly admitted urgent care surgeries include skin abscesses, internal bleeding, tumor removal, fracture repair, intestinal obstruction, and torn cruciate, among others.
