Report Overview

Lidan Paishi Pian is a traditional Chinese herbal medicine primarily used to treat gallstones and related biliary disorders by promoting bile secretion, relieving inflammation, and facilitating the expulsion of stones. It typically contains ingredients such as lysimachia, rhubarb, and other herbal extracts known for their hepatoprotective and cholagogic properties. The product is commonly prescribed in TCM practices and sold as an over-the-counter remedy in pharmacies across China, often positioned as a natural alternative to surgical interventions for mild to moderate gallstone cases. Its efficacy is supported by both historical use in TCM and modern pharmacological studies, though clinical evidence may vary in rigor. The market for Lidan Paishi Pian is influenced by growing consumer preference for herbal treatments, increasing gallstone prevalence linked to dietary changes, and government support for traditional medicine, though it faces competition from conventional pharmaceuticals and regulatory scrutiny over herbal product standardization.
