Abstracts

Liquid Penetrant Inspection (LPI) Service is a non - destructive testing method used to detect surface - breaking defects in various materials and components. A liquid penetrant, usually containing a colored dye or a fluorescent substance, is applied to the surface of the object being inspected. The penetrant has the ability to seep into small cracks, pores, and other surface - breaking defects due to capillary action. With the continuous development of the aerospace and defense industries, the demand for high - quality materials and components is increasing. LPI services are crucial for detecting surface - breaking defects in aircraft components, such as turbine blades and landing gear, to ensure flight safety. Therefore, the demand for LPI services in these industries is expected to remain high. The automotive industry also has a significant demand for LPI services. As the industry focuses on improving the quality and reliability of vehicles, LPI is used to detect defects in engine components, chassis, and body parts. The increasing production of electric vehicles and the need for high - quality components in these vehicles are further driving the demand for LPI services. The development of new penetrant materials and inspection equipment is improving the accuracy and efficiency of LPI services. For example, the use of fluorescent penetrants with higher sensitivity and better light - emitting properties can detect smaller defects. In addition, the integration of digital imaging technology and computer - aided analysis systems enables more accurate identification and measurement of defects, reducing the subjectivity of manual inspection.

The global Liquid Penetrant Inspection (LPI) Service market size was estimated at USD 285.0 million in 2025 and is projected to grow at a compound annual growth rate (CAGR) of 6.10% during the forecast period.
