Report Overview

Peek dental material, a high-performance polymer known as polyetheretherketone, is increasingly utilized in dentistry due to its exceptional mechanical properties, biocompatibility, and resistance to wear and corrosion. This thermoplastic material is particularly valued for dental implants, prosthetics, and orthodontic devices, as it closely mimics the mechanical behavior of natural bone while offering superior strength and longevity compared to traditional materials like titanium or ceramics. Its radiolucency allows for clear imaging in diagnostic procedures, and its lightweight nature enhances patient comfort. The growing demand for biocompatible and durable dental solutions, combined with advancements in 3D printing and CAD/CAM technologies, has positioned PEEK as a promising alternative in restorative and implant dentistry, particularly for patients with metal allergies or those seeking aesthetic, metal-free options. The market is further driven by increasing dental disorders, an aging population, and the rising adoption of digital dentistry. However, high production costs and limited long-term clinical data may restrain its widespread adoption in the short term. Key players are focusing on R&D to improve material properties and reduce costs, while dental professionals are gradually embracing PEEK for its versatility and patient-specific customization potential.
