Report Overview

A self-hosted email system is a type of email service where the infrastructure and management of the email servers are maintained by the organization itself, rather than relying on third-party service providers. This approach allows for greater control over the email environment, including customization, security, and privacy settings. Self-hosted email systems are typically installed on the organization's own servers or on dedicated hosting services, and they can be configured to meet specific business needs. This setup enables organizations to have full administrative access, allowing them to manage users, set up email policies, and ensure compliance with internal and external regulations. It also offers the flexibility to integrate with other in-house systems and applications, providing a seamless workflow.
