Report Overview

Sodium Fructose Diphosphate (SFDP) is a food additive and a sodium salt of fructose diphosphate. It is a white crystalline powder that is soluble in water. SFDP is primarily used as a leavening agent in the food industry, particularly in the production of baked goods and other products that require a leavening agent to create a light, airy texture. It works by releasing carbon dioxide gas when mixed with an acid, which causes the dough or batter to rise. Additionally, SFDP is known for its ability to improve the texture and stability of food products, as well as its role in enhancing the flavor and aroma of certain dishes. It is considered a safe and effective leavening agent, and its use is regulated by food safety authorities to ensure consumer health and product quality.
