Report Overview

Telomere Length Testing Service is a diagnostic procedure that measures the length of telomeres, which are the protective caps found at the ends of chromosomes. This service is typically offered by medical laboratories and healthcare providers to assess an individual's biological age and potential risk for age-related diseases. The process involves collecting a DNA sample, often from a blood or saliva sample, and analyzing it to determine the length of telomeres. Shorter telomeres are associated with cellular aging and a higher risk of certain health conditions, while longer telomeres may indicate a slower aging process. The results of this testing can provide valuable insights into an individual's health status and may guide personalized health and lifestyle interventions to promote longevity and prevent age-related diseases.
