BMI View: Between 2015 and 2019 we expect growth in Cote d'Ivoire's construction sector to average 8.2%, making it one of the strongest growth markets in West Africa. A significant project pipeline, developing PPP market and an economy less exposed to falling commodity prices will support growth. The biggest threat remains an uptick in political risk, especially in the run-up to the October 2015 elections.

A number of megaprojects, in line with the country's USD22.8bn National Development Plan, mean significant investment is taking place in the country's infrastructure sector. Government revenue is expected to remain conducive to investment, while private investment has been increasing. Cote d'Ivoire is experiencing a boom in investment in the transport and power sectors, while growing natural resource investment is creating additional demand for capacity.
