JLS: Stumbling Through The Regional Crisis

The growth outlook across the Levant has changed for the worst in recent months, and we have downgraded our 2011 real GDP growth forecasts for Jordan, Lebanon and Syria accordingly. Large-scale violent unrest in Syria is a particular concern, and will not only push that economy into recession, but will also add to strains on neighbouring

Jordan and Lebanon through a potential influx in refugees, and heightened investor risk aversion. External conditions paint a mixed picture in this regard, with higher commodity prices likely to lead to a surge in import bills on the one hand, while on the other hand the uptrend in oil prices in should result in an increase in remittance inflows from the Gulf. The key question going forward will be to what extent the security situation deteriorates over the coming months, which will likely see foreign investors remain at bay for the foreseeable future.

The outlook for Lebanon's economy over the coming quarters has become decidedly less optimistic since the start of 2011. Although we had previously highlighted how external headwinds threatened to derail growth momentum, even we were caught slightly off guard regarding the extent to which the regional and global environment would weigh on economic activity. As a result, we now project real GDP to expand by 3.3% this year, following an estimated 8.2% in 2010. While by no means a worst-case scenario given the extent of regional unrest concomitant with the 'Arab Spring', at the moment there is little to suggest that growth momentum will be able to remain within its long-term trend average around 6.0%.

The political crisis in Syria will have a significant negative impact on the country's medium-term growth trajectory in our view, and consequently we have downgraded our core growth forecast to -1.3% and 2.8% for 2011 and 2012 respectively (from 4.4% and 5.0% previously). While it is still too early to predict the outcome of the current political situation, we note that growth will suffer under all possible circumstances. Our core forecasts are based on the assumption that the regime of President Bashar al-Assad remains in power, and we note that these projections would be extremely optimistic should the regime fall.

Following a series of political and economic reforms undertaken by the government in recent years, we maintain that Jordan's long-term political outlook is among the most stable in the region. Nonetheless, we highlight that the social uprisings that emerged in the Middle East and North Africa at the start of 2011 are indicative of the threat that low living standards and lack of political freedoms – both features that Jordan shares with other states such as Syria – poses to the long-term sustainable stability.

CHAPTER 1.1: POLITICAL OUTLOOK - JORDAN

SWOT Analysis

Long-Term Political Outlook

Monarchy To Continue Ruling Over The Coming Decade

Following a series of political and economic reforms undertaken by the government in the recent years, we maintain that Jordan's long-term political outlook is among the most stable in the region.

GCC Expansion

Morocco And Jordan In GCC : Initial Thoughts

Although the possibility of Morocco and Jordan joining the Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) has only been vaguely touched upon by officials from either side, we believe the implications of future membership for both sides are mostly positive.

TABLE: Implications for Morocco & Jordan

CHAPTER 1.2: ECONOMIC OUTLOOK - JORDAN

SWOT Analysis

Economic Activity

Political Crisis Hurting Economic Growth Outlook

On the back of a faltering tourism sector and a weakening investment drive both domestic as well as foreign in Jordan, we have revised down our real GDP growth forecasts for 2011 to 2.8% from 3.8%.

TABLE: JORDAN – ECONOMIC ACTIVITY

Monetary Policy

Imported Inflationary Pressures To Rise

We believe the prospect of high commodity prices will continue to add to inflationary pressures in Jordan.

TABLE: Reassessing The Growth Outlook

TABLE: JORDAN – MONETARY POLICY

Banking Sector

Strong Recovery To Continue

Fiscal Policy

Saudi Grant Reinforces Prospective GCC Expansion

Although not officially linked to the idea of GCC expansion, the US $400mn grant Saudi Arabia offered Jordan in early June backs our view that Riyadh will attempt to bring Amman closer into its orbit.

CHAPTER 1.3: 10-YEAR FORECAST - JORDAN

The Jordanian Economy To 2020

Exports Driving Long-Term Growth

Stable export growth and an expanding private sector will underpin Jordan's economic progress over our ten-year forecast period.

Long-Term Political Outlook

Political Upheaval Inevitable In The Long Term?

Political stability will remain hard to come by in Lebanon over the coming decade.

CHAPTER 2.2: ECONOMIC OUTLOOK - LEBANON

SWOT Analysis

Economic Activity

All Signs Point To Slowdown

Lebanon's economy is set to slow through 2011 and into 2012, as a combination of elevated commodity prices and a spike higher in political risk weighs on consumption and investment patterns.

TABLE: LEBANON – ECONOMIC ACTIVITY

Balance of Payments

Current Account Deficit Remains A Key Risk

Lebanon's gaping current account deficit is forecast to widen further in 2011 concomitant with higher energy prices and a slowdown in tourism receipts.

CHAPTER 2.3: 10-YEAR FORECAST - LEBANON

The Lebanese Economy To 2020

Long-Term Growth Depends On Structural Reforms

Lebanon's economy will face a host of structural challenges in attempting to meet its long-term growth potential, with a massive infrastructure deficit, elevated public debt load, and ongoing political risk weighing on our outlook through 2020.
