BMI View: A slowdown in China's economic is currently slowing growth in Taiwan's commercial real estate sector. However, a recent thawing of relations with China as well as an increasingly liberal investment climate and a more diversified export market point towards a favourable medium-term outlook.

The commercial real estate sector in Taiwan is well developed and is supported by the island's position as a regional trading and financial hub. Taiwan's healthy demographic position and increasing international visitor numbers provide opportunities for retail developers as big multinationals continue to come to take advantage of the country's (relatively) open economy.
