BMI views the decision to bring the second Queen-Elizabeth aircraft carrier into service in the Royal Navy as based on its ability to project power. BMI thinks that public austerity, from which the UK defence sector is not protected, is likely to leak over into the Strategic Defence and Security Review (SDSR) to be held in 2015. Our security risk ratings calculate the UK as having a high level of domestic security due to a low crime rate and a low risk of interstate conflict. While terrorism continues to be an issue, we view the government as determined to respond to the threat. At the end of August, the national terror level was raised to severe as a response to the so-called 'Islamic State', and the number of UK citizens travelling to Syria for jihad. We think that this threat has the potential to a new threat, which is an even stronger re-emergence of extreme far right groups.
