Abstracts

Agriculture is important for China, which draws Chinese Central Government's close attention. With the industrial modernization, Chinese agricultural industry is to develop to be more environmentally friendly, hi-tech-oriented and less resource-dependent.

However, agrichemical industries, such as fertilizer and pesticide industries, are facing overcapacity; feed industry requires upgrading and food industry witnesses security crisis. Hence, the government has restricted the chaotic expansion by implementing stricter requirements, such as industrial entry criteria. To maintain long-term development and to develop with stronger competitiveness, companies have to expand their capacities, enrich product portfolios and extend value chain through mergers and acquisitions (M&A) in the coming years.
