Abstracts

Paraquat, one of the most widely used herbicides in the world, was firstly launched in Britain in 1962 and introduced to China in 1978. But it is highly toxic, and studies have found that ingesting just 3 grams of it can cause failure of the liver, kidney and other organs, fibrosis of the lungs, and respiratory failure. There is no known antidote so far.

Since 1 July, 2016, all paraquat AS formulation products had been forbidden for sale or application in China. Also, the solicited opinions manuscript regarding the prohibition and limitation on the use of some pesticides, issued by the Ministry of Agriculture of the People's Republic of China (MOA) in May 2016, had revised paraquat's toxicity and reclassified it as extremely toxic, and field experiments and registration applications for paraquat are no longer to be accepted or approved.

Some authorities in the MOA are doubtful toward new formulations and have not approved new registrations yet. As of June 2018, Nanjing Redsun Co., Ltd was the only company authorized to sell paraquat GW, though its license (to produce paraquat for domestic use) will be expired in September 2018. And no one is allowed to produce paraquat for domestic use anymore after that. There is two years gap to allow paraquat GW to be sold in China after the company's license expires. After September 2020, it is forbidden to sell any paraquat products in China. In other words, paraquat (for domestic use) will be vanished in China legally after September 2020.
