Phytase, as an enzyme that can break down the undigestible phytic acid (phytate) part found in grains and oil seeds and thus release digestible phosphorus and calcium, is used as an animal feed supplement to enhance the nutritive value of plant material by liberation of inorganic phosphate from phytic acid (myo-inositol hexakisphosphate) and, thereby, to reduce environmental phosphorus pollution.

Phytase in China is only in the start-up stage, and phytase producers both in China and from abroad are making great effort marketing this product. At present, its market is not big.

However, with the rising price of calcium hydrogen phosphate, and the fast development of feed industry, where China's phytase goes, phytase is gradually enlarging its market in China.

Phytase will be widely used in China in two years and the using of phytase in feed will be the development trend in the future and Chinese phytase market future will be very bright.

Competition between domestic suppliers and overseas suppliers such as BASF and Novo, is increasingly fierce.
