Abstracts

Objectives of this report are to provide an in-depth and comprehensive analysis of the factors affecting the price of titanium dioxide in China and to forecast the prices for September–November 2017.

China has been an important supplier of titanium dioxide in the world for many years. During 2013–2016, the domestic titanium dioxide industry has registered a rapid growth as supported by the increase in demand for the product both at home and abroad. In recent years, the official environmental supervision is getting stringent. Under this circumstance, mergers and acquisitions among domestic suppliers have accelerated. Benefited from the consolidation of the titanium dioxide industry as well as the positive development of key downstream industries, development of China's titanium dioxide industry is prosperous.

What is the price trend of titanium dioxide in China in recent years? What are the factors behind the price changes? How do the production capacity and output of the product change in the country? What is the relationship between import and export and the price of titanium dioxide in China? What are the downstream consumptions of titanium dioxide and how is the impact on the price? What is the law of the price of the product?

In this report, you will find answers to the questions mentioned above. The report mainly focuses on the information below:

Price fluctuation of titanium dioxide in recent years, 2013–August 2017

Supply and demand of titanium dioxide in China, 2013–2016

Import and export of titanium dioxide, 2013–2016
