Executive Summary

Clear aligners are a clear, plastic kind of dental braces that are used to straighten teeth. Traditional metal braces have been around for decades, but clear aligners are a novel alternative. They are constructed of a clear, thin plastic that covers the teeth and moves them into position gradually. The computerized model recommends phases between the current and desired tooth positions, and aligners are designed for each stage. For one or two weeks, each aligner is worn for 22 hours every day. These gradually reposition the teeth into the position that the orthodontist or dentist and the patient have agreed on.

China's clear aligner market can be segmented based on age group (Children & Teenagers and Adults).

China's clear aligner market has been badly impacted by the pandemic in the initial months of 2020. The Chinese clear aligner market, on the other hand, has seen a substantial sales comeback since the country reopened. This is due to the gradual reopening of dental and orthodontic clinics, as well as a rapid rebound in patient numbers. Despite COVID-19's initial setback, the market has successfully adjusted by using lower capacity, production machinery, and other techniques that decrease the need for manual labor. This has further decreased the labor expenses of clear aligner companies while also improving the quality of their products.

China's clear aligner market has increased significantly during the years 2019-2020 and projections are made that the market would rise in the next four years i.e. 2021-2025 tremendously. China's clear aligner market is expected to increase due to the rising GNI per capita, rapid urbanization, dominating younger population, increasing treatment rate, etc. Yet the market faces some challenges such as clear aligner restriction, undersupply of orthodontics and dentists, etc. Moreover, the market growth would succeed by various market trends like increasing involvement of private medical institutions, technological advancements, etc.
