Executive Summary

Sterilization is very important in controlling infection in hospitals and helps in reducing the risk of transmission of infectious diseases. Hospital associated infections can be one of the major reasons of diseased state and mortality in hospitalized patients. Increase in the aging population is leading to improvements in demand for healthcare services. This along with changes in healthcare reimbursement policies is pushing sterilization providers to offer improved operations. The changing demand scenario in the market is forcing manufacturers to offer high quality service at lower costs. Advancements in technology are leading to introduction of technically enhanced instruments in the medical equipment market. The enhanced instruments such as endoscopes and analyzers have increased the need for advanced sterilizers that are compatible with such equipment.

These technological advancements are responsible for drastic shift from steam sterilizers in the market to low temperature sterilizers. The low temperature sterilization market is expected to be the fastest growing segment for the next 5 years, due to its competitive advantages over other methods of sterilization.

Regionally, U.S. and Europe are the biggest markets of the global sterilization market as majority of market leaders are also based in these regions of the globe. The Asian region of the sterilization market is expected to exhibit favorable growth in the years to come. Rising awareness regarding health concerns, improving spending capacity, growth of aging population along with increasing number of surgeries and growth in the per capita income are expected to drive this growth in the forecasted period.
