OVERVIEW

TC-5214 (dexmecamylamine) is a single isomer of mecamylamine that inhibits α_3 nicotinic receptors and is a potent nicotine acetylcholine antagonist. Primary hyperhidrosis is associated with a selective increase in sympathetic activity. Present treatments such as Botox, mAChR antagonists, and sympathectomy only locally treat the increased sympathetic activity. Low doses of TC-5214 will inhibit primary hyperhidrosis in all localizations. Rapid and cost effective development path in primary hyperhidrosis. Over 2,900 patients have been treated with TC-5214 for overactive bladder and depression with a well characterized safety profile. Currently, Atacama is testing TC-5214 in a Phase 2 clinical trial for palmar hyperhidrosis. Strong support from KOLs and hyperhidrosis patient advocacy group.
