Gastrostomy Overview

A gastrostomy is a surgical procedure used to insert a tube, often referred to as a 'G-tube', through the abdomen and into the stomach. Gastrostomy is used to provide a route for tube feeding if needed for four weeks or longer, and/or to vent the stomach for air or drainage. There are two methods used to perform a gastrostomy: the percutaneous endoscopic gastrostomy (PEG), and an open surgical procedure. Percutaneous gastrostomy has been developed as a quicker and less invasive means of introducing the gastrostomy tube. Percutaneous gastrostomy performed by ultrasound has the lowest rate complications as well as lowest procedural mortality when compared with percutaneous endoscopic gastrostomy and surgical gastrostomy.
