Research Summary

Beauveria bassiana is a naturally occurring fungus that is commonly used as a biological control agent against various insect pests. It belongs to the class of fungi known as entomopathogenic fungi, which means they infect and kill insects. Beauveria bassiana is known for its ability to parasitize a wide range of insect species, including beetles, flies, mosquitoes, and caterpillars. The fungus infects the insect by adhering to its cuticle and penetrating its body, ultimately causing death by releasing enzymes and toxins that break down the insect's tissues. Beauveria bassiana is considered an environmentally friendly alternative to chemical insecticides and is often used in integrated pest management strategies in agriculture, forestry, and horticulture to control insect populations while minimizing the impact on beneficial organisms and the environment.

The major global manufacturers of Beauveria Bassiana include BASF, BioWorks, Koppert B.V, Certis USA, Tianren, Troy BioSciences, Bioquirama SAS, FILNOVA, BuildASoil, Vanda Technology, M. D Agrotech, Tari Bio-Tech, T.STANES, Multiplex
