Research Summary

Bed frames are structures or frames designed to support and elevate a mattress, providing a stable foundation for a bed. They are typically made of metal or wood and come in various styles and sizes to accommodate different mattress sizes and aesthetic preferences. Bed frames consist of a headboard, footboard, side rails, and a center support system. The headboard is the vertical panel located at the head end of the bed, while the footboard is the panel at the foot end. Side rails connect the headboard and footboard, providing stability and support.
